

dies, every audio product endured his discerning ear, analysing sound quality, frequency response, and immersive experiences. His musical inclinations turned each testing session into a mini dance party, much to the amusement of his colleagues.

Prakrit's Fitness Regimen with Smartwatches

In the midst of Prakrit's fitness quest, the office witnessed a metamorphosis into a wellness hub. His desk doubled as a gym station, adorned with smartwatches of all shapes and sizes. Prakrit, embodying the epitome of multitasking, combined his workout routines with rigorous smart-watch assessments. He monitored heart rates, tracked steps, and scrutinised sleep patterns, conducting stress tests while sprinting on the treadmill or performing yoga asanas. The smartwatches underwent trials of endurance, ensuring they could keep pace with the most active lifestyles.

The chaos was no respecter of location. In the Delhi office, the same scenes unfolded with eerie precision. Jayesh, the Zero1 Promotions aficionado, injected conversations with more plugs for the awards than a power socket on overtime.

Gamers Left High and very very Dry

Meanwhile, in the Mumbai office, gaming aficionados faced their worst nightmare—a drought. Not a single second to spare for their beloved virtual escapades, leaving the office in the throes of the longest gaming dry spell of the year. Baiju, the design wizard, juggled magazine layouts with an avalanche of miscellaneous tasks, each clamouring for his undivided attention.

But fear not! Amidst the chaos, democracy thrived in the form of the gamers' democratic duty: voting for their favourite games of the year. A ritual that brought a glimmer of unity in the stormy sea of tests, promotions, and multitasking.

Zero1 Awards: An Office Tale

The month trundled on in this uproarious fashion, with each member playing their part in this zany theatre of tech and chaos. And as the sun set on the office, amidst the clutter of benchmarks, photo-clicking marathons, graphics card swapping symphonies, funk-inspired responses, impromptu gym sessions, promotional overdrive, game-less despair, and voting fervour, one thing was certain—it was a day for the office history books, a comedy of errors painted in the vibrant colours of office life.

As the last email was sent and the shutters pulled down, the chaos abated, leaving behind a tale ripe for retelling over countless coffee breaks. For in the heart of this digital jungle, amidst deadlines and tests, laughter echoed louder than any printer, a testament to the resilient spirit of the office warriors navigating the unpredictable seas of technology and whimsy. d

When someone asks us how was Zero1 this year... A blur.
