The world of TWS earphones has evolved a lot. What started as a novelty product for the ultimate geeks and early adopters of technology has now become a necessity for most. There have been multiple factors that have contributed to this change, with the biggest ones being the changing work environments and the removal of 3.5mm headphone jacks from smartphones. Almost all the top of the line smartphones today are being sold without a headphone jack and the same trend can be seen trickling down into the lower budget segments as well. And, with the onset of work and study from home culture, the trend of hands free calling has picked up speed like never before. Also the fact that bluetooth wireless earphones have gone down in price, while still maintaining a decent level of quality and performance is something is reassuring too. This change has been a result of the combined interest of the consumers and the manufacturers to have the best products in the market at reasonable prices. Now, the market is full of great options to choose from, and the consumers are faced with the problem of plenty when doing their research about what earbuds they should buy for daily use.
