

Chaos, Coffee, and No Counter-Strike

Amidst the caffeine-powered crunch time at Digit, where sleepless nights become the norm when we are closing the magazine, there is always a sense of camaraderie that permeates through the chaos. The team, fueled by copious amounts of coffee and determination, finds solace in small gaming sessions sprinkled throughout their hectic days. These brief respites from the grind not only provided much-needed breaks but also served as morale boosters, reminding them that even amidst the madness, there could be moments of joy.

Caffeine-Powered Crunch Time

Ah, the office grind. But not the type that involves answering emails and attending endless meetings. No, this was the caffeine-fueled, sleep-deprived kind of grind. The team at TechNova Enterprises was in the throes of a hectic closing, racing against time to meet those elusive deadlines. Sleepless nights? Check. Eyebags big enough to carry groceries? Check. But hey, at least there were some small gaming sessions sprinkled in between to keep morale high. Who said saving the world (or closing a deal) couldn't be fun?

Post-Vietnam Vacation Blues

Just when they thought they couldn't survive another day of the office madness, Dhriti and Manish swooped in like heroes with tales of their epic vacation to Vietnam. And guess what they brought back? Souvenirs for everyone! Suddenly, all was well in the office again... until the inevitable happened. One by one, team members succumbed to exhaustion, forcing them to take a day off to recover. It was like a domino effect, except instead of falling tiles, it was falling colleagues. But hey, at least they got some cool gifts out of it, right?

Jayesh's Gujarati Adventure

While the rest of the team was busy saving the world one spreadsheet at a time, Jayesh had other plans. He was on a mission to stay "vocal for local" and what better way to do that than embarking on a road trip through Gujarat? Armed with snacks and a playlist full of Gujarati folk songs, Jayesh set off on his adventure, leaving behind a trail of envy (and a slightly chaotic office) in his wake.

The Resurgence of Vampire Survivors

Just when they thought they were safe from the clutches of addiction, Vampire Survivors made a triumphant comeback. Suddenly, people were sinking hours into the game, oblivious to the outside world. And who would have thought? Satvik, the undisputed king of Counter-Strike, finally caved and gave Vampire Survivors a chance. And you know what? He's loving every minute of it. Looks like there's a new obsession in town, folks.

Satvik's Gaming Odyssey

Just when they thought they had escaped the clutches of addiction, Vampire Survivors made a triumphant comeback, capturing the attention of the entire team. Even Satvik, known for his prowess in Counter-Strike, succumbed to the allure of the game, losing himself in its immersive world for hours

Satvik Pandey
Daft Punk, who?

