

he world of technology while it may seem to be peaceful from the outside, has a lot of factions debating over which one is the best. And, this is not just limited to one or two categories, the issue is widespread.

In the world of PC components, the biggest debate that has been raging on for years now, is about whether Intel is better at making CPUs or is AMD the better at making cutting edge GPUs when compared to NVIDIA. At Digit, we are also divided in our opinion. While NVIDIA has had the upper hand in the GPU game, AMD has made steady progress. On the CPU side of things, AMD has gotten better over the years to the point where they are neck and neck with Intel, while outperforming Team Blue in the high end gaming segment.

Audio enthusiasts and gamers alike have been debating about whether a wired solution is better than wireless solution for their gear or not. For the most part, wireless connectivity standards have gotten much better over the years, and there is almost no noticeable difference between them. However, the slight bit of difference that is there, has been igniting debates amongst geeks for years.

MacOS and Windows in the world of PCs and laptops and iOS and Android have been pitted against each other for ages now, and the debate is best left unsettled. Or... Maybe... One is better? We are not picking sides right now. Right now is the keyword

The smartphone world has a new thing that is being talked about with passion - candybar and foldable phones. While one side is in love with the traditional form factor, the other is embracing and advocating innovation brought in by foldables. And, joining this new debate are the generative AI tools.

So, we decided to revisit some of the oldest debates in the world of tech and also delved into some newer ones as well!

I N D E X

Intel vs AMD	52
NVIDIA vs AMD	54
Wired vs Wireless Audio	56
Candybar vs Foldable Phones.....	58
Android vs iOS	60
Wired vs Wireless Peripherals	62
Google Gemini vs Microsoft Copilot.....	64
Windows vs MacOS.....	66