

HONOR CHOICE SMARTWATCH

Makes a great case for itself in the smartwatch space

Satvik Pandey | satvik@digit.in Honor staged a comeback in India last year, marking the brand's return to this highly competitive market after a very lengthy break. The brand at the time focussed on smartphones; however, they are now diving into the world of smartwatches. Honor is not a new name in this space though. During their last stint in India, they had a few watches listed, and they were doing well. Now, with the launch of the Honor Choice Watch, at Rs. 6,499, they have marked a comeback. I got a chance to experience the watch for some time, recently, and while the watch was mostly a typical smartwatch, there were a few things that I wanted to specially highlight with this watch.

The Indian smartwatch market has become incredibly competitive in the last couple of years. So, without further ado, let's have a look at my views on the Honor Choice watch after using them for a couple of weeks –

Build and Design

The Honor Choice watch does all the basics well when it comes to the design. The case has a metallic finish, and the strap is made out of the regular rubber, which we see in budget smartwatches across the board. The glass on the front of the watch also did not get scratched up a lot during my time of use. It did pick up a couple of minor knicks though. Overall, at first glance, the watch did impress me.

However, I was not particularly in love with the back of the watch. It felt very plasticky, and with watches like cmf Watch Pro and offerings like the Hammer Conquer, we have seen better build, especially when it comes to the back of the watch. Despite its hiatus from the Indian market, Honor had been active in some other markets, and would have the resources and R&D to make it better. I had honestly set my expectations higher than what Honor delivered with the Honor Choice watch. As for the fit, which is an important aspect with any smartwatch, the Honor Choice watch does the job well. It is fairly light weight and the band that comes fitted on the watch, also did not cause irritation on my skin even when I was wearing the watch for fairly long periods of time.

Features and day to day use

The Honor Choice watch offers a plethora of features that make up all the ground that the watch lost in terms of the build and design. Its 1.95-inch