Instagram now lets you limit interactions to your Close Friends

Meta-owned Instagram is a popular platform for sharing moments, thoughts, and creativity with friends and followers. The company regularly introduces new features for better user experience. Now, Instagram is expanding its Limits tool to allow users to limit interactions- like comments, DMs, tags, and mentions- to Close Friends.

Currently, Instagram offers a Limits tool that helps people limit interactions – like comments, DMs, tags and mentions – to their core community, like long-time followers or only people they follow back. Now, the company is expanding Limits so people, particularly teens, can limit those same interactions to Close Friends.

Android now finally lets you edit RCS messages

Google has shared new Android features and updates designed to elevate your everyday life. The new features include the ability to edit RCS messages. With Google Messages, you can now edit sent messages to fix typos, add missing words, or clarify your meaning. Simply tap and hold a sent RCS message to make changes within 15 minutes of sending it. Coming soon, with instant hotspot, you'll be able to connect your Android tablet or Chromebook to your phone's hotspot with a single tap, eliminating the need to enter your password. Additionally, if you need to switch devices during a Google Meet call, you can tap the Cast icon to seamlessly transition between your Android phone, tablet, or web browser.

YouTube launches its 'Playables' games for all users

YouTube has finally launched Playables for all users. For those who are unaware, Playables are games that can be played directly on YouTube. The company started testing this feature in September last year. A similar gaming experience is also provided by the streaming giant Netflix. Now it remains to be seen how this is received by the millions using the platform.
