

The Times, they are a-changin'

If you guys have missed reading the news over the last month and a half, it's been an interesting month, here at the Digit Test Centre. There's a lot to catch you readers up on, so we're gonna get to the point: the Digit we all know and love has decided to jump into more prospective waters.

The Empty Nest

Vikas Gupta (the man, the myth, the legend) will be facing a rather drastic change in scenery, in the months ahead. Vicky-G, as he's fondly called in the office, has decided to nudge his baby Digit into the big leagues. As of June 1st, 2024, Digit is now a property of the Times Network. Vicky-G, who's spent the better part of the past 15 years living, breathing and dreaming Digit, took the step any good father would when they see that their offspring has grown into adulthood – he gently encouraged them to move out and see the world.

It's been quite the ride, good sir. We can't quite help make that empty nest seem any less vacant, but we can assure you that everyone moving with your brand bears the same humane and idealistic spirit as it takes on the big bad world. Thanks for that, really.

New Faces, New Times

Enter: Rohit Chadda (handle pending). We've interacted with our new COO fairly frequently, over the last month; and so far, the team's hopeful. For the last 24 years, the idea of Digit has spurred every team member forward and upward, and the new boss-man seems to get that vibe. So far, he's encouraged us to do as Digit does.

Even Mithun and Dhriti (the one-two punch of reality and pessimism) seem to be mollified – which is saying something. That said, looks like there's some intriguing 'Times' ahead. Meanwhile, Jayesh, who came back to the Digit team after finishing a stint at the old Times Group, occasionally succumbs to minor bouts of paranoia. He strongly believes that this company is following him around – the Ahab to his white whale.

Special Effects

In other news, Ali and Prakrit dealt with the regime change in the only way they knew how – they jumped into obsessive-compulsive creativity and after weeks of work, resurfaced with the Lenovo Legion Go review video that's up on our YouTube Channel. They're now dealing with their own PTSD symptoms. Ali jumps every time someone breathes in the studio and

"The big secret no one tells you. Life is a quadratic equation that never ends. So stop trying to solve it."

Wait, where's the Sa1nt?

Satvik has had the most eventful month "among us" all (no, not suggesting he was the impostor). In the span of a couple of weeks, the boy shifted cities, watched the brand change hands, and discovered a whole new level of professional whirlwinds. He seems to be doing fine, though his shift from Mumbai to Noida was an emotional roller-coaster. People spent a few days in denial, broke a few chairs in anger, tried bribing him with good food, cried on his shoulder, and finally gave in and accepted his departure for what it was – Kübler-Ross would be proud. Satvik's only complaint with his new environment is being stuck gaming on a Mac. As Manish and Prakrit keep telling him – there's no one else to blame but himself, really. That said, he's at work putting together a PC for himself in his spare time. Killer Rigs FTW.
