Procreate CEO slams Gen AI

Generative AI has become a hot topic recently, with many companies eagerly integrating it into their products to offer more creative and personalised experiences. From art creation tools to content generation platforms, AI's capabilities have expanded rapidly, making it a go-to feature for companies who aim to stay ahead in the tech race.

However, not everyone is on board with this trend. Procreate CEO, James Cuda, has made it clear that his company has no plans to integrate generative AI into any of its products. Cuda strongly opposes the idea. His announcement is a bold departure from the industry norm, highlighting a growing divide in how companies view the role of AI in the creative process. Cuda also emphasised that Procreate's products are designed and developed with the idea that a human will be creating something.

OpenAI users are getting emotionally attached to ChatGPT voice assistant, and it's risky

OpenAI recently launched its ChatGPT 4o Voice mode. It hasn't been a long time since it was unveiled and now there seem to be some concerns about it. OpenAI has flagged some concerns about how this feature might impact the users. Concerns about how AI is integrated into a person's life with this new feature have come forth. OpenAI has tested the feature under different settings and it has released its findings through a comprehensive technical document known as a System Card. <https://bit.ly/3yQ4gg4>

Watch Elon Musk dancing with Donald Trump

In today's digital age, AI is making waves in ways we never imagined. From transforming industries to reshaping entertainment, artificial intelligence is continually pushing boundaries.

We all know how Tesla CEO Elon Musk enjoys making comments and sharing AI-generated photos and videos. Now, Musk has shared an AI-generated video on X (formerly Twitter) in which he is dancing with former US President Donald Trump. It's no wonder the video with the caption "Haters will say this is AI" went viral, amassing over 121 million views with many users reacting to the video. <https://bit.ly/46YyLwM>
