

Features and Connectivity

In addition to its core function as a turntable, the House of Marley Stir It Up offers a range of features that enhance its versatility. One of the most notable is the USB output, which allows you to digitise your vinyl collection. This is a great feature for those who want to preserve their records or enjoy them on the go. The process is straightforward: simply connect the turntable to your computer via the included USB cable and use the free software provided by House of Marley to record and convert your vinyl into digital files. While the software is basic, it gets the job done, and more advanced users can opt for other audio recording software if they prefer. The Stir It Up Turntable also includes RCA outputs, allowing you to connect it to a wide range of audio equipment. The inclusion of a headphone jack is a nice touch, providing a personal listening option that doesn't require external speakers. This feature is particularly useful for late-night listening sessions or for those who prefer to immerse themselves in the music without disturbing others.

Another feature worth mentioning is the auto start/stop function. This is a convenience feature that stops the turntable from spinning once it reaches the end of a record. It's a small detail, but one that helps to protect both the stylus and your records from unnecessary wear. For those who are prone to getting lost in the music, this feature is a welcome addition.

What sets the House of Marley Stir It Up apart is its combination of eco-friendly design, ease of use, and a well-rounded feature set. While it may not have the audiophile credentials of some higher-end models, it offers a compelling package for the average listener who values both sound quality and sustainability.

Final Thoughts

The House of Marley Stir It Up Turntable is a standout product in the mid-range turntable market. It successfully blends style, performance, and sustainability into a package that is both accessible and enjoyable to use. Whether you're new to vinyl or a seasoned collector, the Stir It Up Turntable has something to offer. Its warm, rich sound, combined with its eco-friendly design and ease of use, makes it a worthy addition to any home audio setup. While it may not satisfy the most demanding audiophiles, it strikes a perfect balance for the majority of the listeners with a hint of nostalgia.

The inclusion of features like the built-in preamp, USB output, and auto start/stop function adds to its appeal, making it a versatile choice for a wide range of users. This product will take you on a melodious ride through the years. A

DIGIT DIARY

An elaborate account of whatever transpires at the Digit Test Centres in Delhi and Mumbai!

What happens in office...

This month has been quite eventful for our little group. Satvik is inching ever closer to building his dream PC. His craving for Counter-Strike is similar to that of an addict, and in the absence of his favorite game, he has turned to Civilization VI. It's amusing to see him strategise and conquer in a different realm, trying to fill the void that no gaming has left in his life. His excitement is palpable, and we all hope he gets his PC soon. Manish, on the other hand, continues his streak of saying no to everything Satvik asks or suggests. It's not out of spite or grudge; it's just his thing. He seems to derive some strange satisfaction from it. Whether it's a simple request to join a game or a suggestion for dinner, Manish's default response is a firm no. It's become a running joke among us, and even Satvik has started to take it in stride, often predicting Manish's response before he even asks. Mithun has had a rather introspective month. He has started listening to Bollywood music, and it's fascinating to see how deeply he connects with the lyrics. This past week, his song of choice has been "Aaj Ki Raat" from Stree 2. He finds prophetic meanings in the lyrics,

"It is still a no."

often sharing his interpretations with us. It's like he's on a quest to find deeper truths through music, and it's been quite enlightening to hear his thoughts. On the work front, the closing crunch came in again.

Surprisingly, we were so on course that this magazine issue closed before the last one even sold out. It's a rare feat, and the team is quite proud of this achievement. The sense of accomplishment is high, and it feels like all the hard work and late nights have paid off. A
