April 14, 2022. A day that will be remembered in the history books. An entrepreneur, often dubbed to be the embodiment of Iron Man, Elon Musk announced his bid to acquire the micro-blogging platform Twitter. After a series of rather prolific public statements, headlines, and lawsuits, Musk finally assumed control of Twitter. Since then, he has made changes in every aspect of Twitter, and they have affected every user in one way or the other. But what lies beneath all of this is interesting. It is the vision to make X (formerly Twitter) the ultimate app for everything, taking it to new heights in the ever-expanding ecosystem of the interwebs.

FREE SPEECH

Twitter and Elon's musky affair started with his vision of promoting free speech on a platform that, at the time of writing, had over 500 million users active on the platform. Often dubbed the "Town Square of the Internet", Musk has always wanted the platform to be a place where everyone is free to express
