Google starts rolling out Ask Photos feature

During its Google I/O 2024, Google unveiled a new feature called "Ask Photos". It is still under "early access" and only a few Android and iOS users will be able to access it. For those unaware, Ask Photos is a new search feature that Google has introduced in its Photos App. You can basically search within the gallery like you would do on a search bar. You can search for a specific video or photo and you will be able to locate it easily. For example, you can search, "What did we eat at the hotel in Agra?" Google will analyse the data and present that specific picture to you. <https://bit.ly/3XAvuzy>

Truecaller's Caller ID issue will be finally fixed in iPhones with iOS 18

Truecaller has worked more swiftly for Android users, in comparison to those with iPhones. This is because of Apple's privacy policies. Because of this, the 'Caller ID' feature didn't work effectively. But there might be some relief with the upcoming iOS 18 update. Back in 2022, an update improved the Apple users' experience but it required users to interact with Siri to identify callers, adding an inconvenient extra step.

However, with the upcoming iOS 18 update, Truecaller's co-founder and CEO Alan Mamedi has confirmed that the app will finally function as it should on iPhones. <https://bit.ly/3XC9g03>

Australia plans social media ban for children under 16

We all know how children today spend much of their time glued to social media platforms like Facebook and Instagram. In response to growing concerns, the Australian government is planning to introduce a minimum age limit for children on social media, potentially as high as 16 years old. Prime Minister Anthony Albanese made the announcement, saying the goal is to get kids off their devices and "onto the footy fields". Federal legislation to enforce this age restriction will be introduced later this year.

Ex-Google executive says search giant was trying to crush rival advertising networks

During an ongoing antitrust trial against Google, a former executive's statement and evidence presented by prosecutors showed that in 2009, Google's goal was to "crush" rival advertising networks. This claim aligns with the U.S. Department of Justice's accusations that Google aimed to monopolise markets for publisher ad servers and advertiser ad networks. <https://bit.ly/3XU4nkj>

EU court orders Apple to pay $14.3 billion in back taxes

In a landmark decision, the European Court of Justice (ECJ) has ordered Apple to pay $14.3

billion in back taxes. The ruling comes after the court sided with the European Commission, declaring that tax breaks extended to Apple by Ireland were illegal. This judgement, announced on Tuesday, is considered the final word on the matter, overturning a previous court decision from 2020 that had favoured the Irish government. <https://bit.ly/3XU2HaF>
