Top Meta executive admits that company scrapes photos and posts without consent

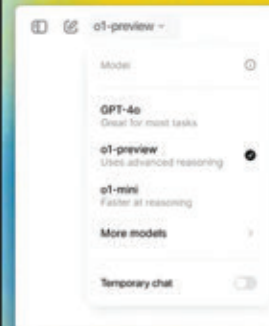

During an inquiry, Meta's global privacy director, Melinda Claybaugh, confirmed that the company collects public data from Australian users to train its artificial intelligence (AI) models. This includes photos and posts from platforms like Facebook and Instagram, dating back as far as 2007. Shockingly, there's no way for Australians to opt out of this data collection, even though users in the European Union are given that option. OpenAI unveils new AI model called o1 aka Strawberry

OpenAI has unveiled its new major model: an AI model code-named Strawberry, officially known as OpenAI o1. More specifically, o1 represents a family of models rather than just a single model. This new series of AI models includes: o1-preview and o1-mini. The o1 models have been designed to spend more time thinking through problems before delivering responses, making them especially effective for complex tasks.

OpenAI planning to increase subscription prices

OpenAI, the company behind ChatGPT, is reportedly considering raising its subscription prices. Currently, its ChatGPT Plus plan costs $20 per month, offering features like priority access to new tools, custom

GPTs, and DALL-E 3 image generation. However, reports suggest that the cost could go up significantly, with some rumours pointing to a potential increase to as much as $2,000 per month. It's unclear whether this price hike will impact the existing ChatGPT Plus service or apply only to OpenAI's upcoming models, such as the one codenamed "Strawberry."
