Children of all ages are now more tech savvy than ever. Thanks to services like Steam, Netflix, Spotify, as well as P2P sharing protocols such as BitTorrent and Darknet, downloading games, music, movies, and TV shows is easier has become child's play. With the boom in popularity of websites like Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, or Snapchat, every teenager seems to have at least more than one social networking account

However, as a direct result of such unrestricted access, Internet addiction is slowly becoming a serious issue. Add to that the massive peer pressure on making social networking accounts, kids who decide to forgo the act of staying connected with their friend circles are shunned and at times even ridiculed for not being net savvy enough.
