

devices. Setting up different user accounts for multiple children is also easy and these settings can be synced across multiple devices. AVG has about 61 different categories for blocked websites, and there are presets available that vary according to age group. You can also customize the “age templates” depending on your level of comfort. For example, you may be okay with your older children viewing artistically tasteful websites containing nude imagery, which may be more impressionable on the minds of younger children.

Unlike most parental control utilities, AVG blocks websites at a network level and can be used with any browser. This allows for a number of other useful features such blocking movies and TV-shows depending on their MPAA or FCC rating. For parents who are concerned that their children are constantly playing violent video games or listening to music with explicit lyrics, AVG Family Safety can also block games based on their ESRB ratings and also restrict access to iTunes music with explicit lyrics. This program blocking can be extended to other third-party applications, allowing you to restrict access to music players, IM clients, etc. It also includes a simple chat/IM logging feature that monitors your children's chats, allowing you to take action should you find any indication of cyber stalking or cyber bullying.

For those of you with Net-savvy children, AVG is specially designed to prevent the use of software and tools that can bypass parental control apps, such as proxy server tools, VPN extensions, DNS masking etc. It can also capture your child's login credentials every time they log into a social networking site, although they will be notified of this. This way, you will not be violating their privacy in a mistrustful manner, which may lead to a whole set of parental issues regarding trust and responsibility.

Parents who wish to take a more open-minded approach can provide their children with a password that overrides all protection, although their browsing history will be logged for you to assess later. You can also plan a timetable-based approach to restrict kids' web-browsing to safe (and limited) hours, especially if they start exhibiting signs of Internet addiction.

Link: <http://dgit.in/AVGFamSafety>

Qustodio Parental Control 2015

Qustodio is slowly growing in popularity in the market for parental control utilities owing to its extent of features and ease of use. As a result, it is also an expensive option, with a price point similar to that of Net Nanny