Ashley Hewson, Serif's managing director, had some criticisms about Adobe Photoshop. Primarily because of its lack of speed and the fact that Adobe is taking too long to adapt to advancement in modern technology. To counter the Photoshop market, at least for the Apple users, Serif launched the Affinity Pro - a software met with both positive and negative criticism by the commercial media sector.

Affinity is, as advertised, extremely fast and uses the potential of the PC's hardware to its advantage. This is mainly because Affinity Pro has been build on an entirely new and improved codebase. In regular lingo: all the edits you make happen with no visible lag, and practically in real-time as compared to Photoshop's 'loading' mouse pointers.

When it comes to features, Serif has pulled all the stops. The software has all the professional photography adjustments you would find in any of the competing software. Affinity Photo has Frequency Separation editing, live blend modes, Inpainting, and advanced retouching, to name a few of
