

User Goals

As long as your Users are people, they will be in want of something, and usually that is what your website, application or product is offering. Often, there may be things that even they don't know they want, but they want when they see it. Whether it is social connection and recognition or even purchasing used cutlery, you need to identify the User goals, because that is the minimum you have to give them in order for them to be Users of your product in the first place.

The UX Designer's Goal

The UX designer's goal is to successfully align the business goals with the user goals. This should work in a way that the business benefits when the user reaches his/her goals. If the goals are not aligned then there are two possibilities. If the users are achieving their goals, they may be happy using your product or service but it will still not be a success for the busi-
