

Finally, we discuss the what sort of future we have in store for us, should this current trend of wearable technology see itself over the hump of popularity it seems to be enjoying. Is it possible that this technology becomes so ingrained in our daily lives, that we no longer look at wearables devices as cumbersome electronics but instead see them as just an extension of our skin? We may have as well taken our first steps into becoming real-world cyborgs. 