

This effectively sums up what any SMM strategy should be like

Analytical tools help marketers know if the SMM is working and to what degree.

- Content is key – Without good content your social media campaign is useless. Form and Context are the two attributes of content.
Context is basically the company voice. Should the content be funny, serious, educational or detailed?
Form is how the content should be presented. Via text, images, video etc?
Posting frequency is also important as users should not be under informed or miss out on content. At the same time they should not be overloaded with posts making it an annoyance.
- Listening Skills are important – Social media listening or monitoring is a skill that involves identifying and assessing how your company or brand is being portrayed online. Listening to public conversations for mention of keywords associated with a brand. By being informed you can alter content to sway things in your favor.
- Staying Current and Relevant – Adapting posts to the latest news and trends helps keep users invested. Nobody wants to hear stale news. Many people use social media for news. Posting trending news or hosting contests opinion polls based on latest events is key.
