

Saying it with an emoji is a unique way of connecting with your social followers

Another reason for such sharing is much less sophisticated but not any less powerful: we want those we love to be living a nice and fulfilling life- and any little thing that we can do towards that end, we do-like sharing a DIY video that will improve their living quarters.

Where it's seen:

Taco Bell used this principle quite well since they apparently understood the entertainment value of emojis-more precisely, the potential entertainment value in combining two different emojis together. The company launched a social media campaign in 2015 in which they introduced an exclusive Taco Bell Emoji. As part of the campaign the audiences could tweet @TacoBell using the taco emoji and a generic emoji of their own liking. The company would then tweet you back with a combination of the two emojis that's more than not, funny. And due to the obvious entertainment value, you bet the audiences wanted to share it, making it one of the most successful social campaigns of the year.

3. To nurture a relationship

Social media is not just a communication tool, it's also a relationship-building utility. Most of the times we may not be aware that while engaging with someone on a social platform, we are pushing the relationship forwards (or
