

ibility. Now, for a brand credibility can rarely be built with messaging. It has to be built from within and must spread across all realms in which a brand is involved-starting with the product itself and spreading to pricing, marketing etc. When it comes to social media messaging, keeping transparency in your communication will go a long way in maintaining trust and remaining credible.

Where it worked:

The thing with trust is that saying you are trustworthy doesn't necessarily make others perceive you that way. However, if you can demonstrate that you can be trusted and are reliable, people will be prone to follow your word-even if it's an advertising Call to action. The video from Volvo featuring Van Damme doesn't have an explicit call to action but it does demonstrate in style the stability and precision of the truck's dynamic steering. And the demonstration was impressive enough to garner over 1.3 million Facebook likes and a whopping 61 million views on Youtube.

5. Appeal to positive emotions like inspiration, illumination or amusement to build a positive brand connection

The study by the University of Pennsylvania that was mentioned earlier puts across the point that readers generally prefer sharing positive articles

Nike strayed away from its famous tag line. This worked wonders for the brand!