

Just as marketers can post updates to their Google+ page and Facebook page timeline, they can also do so on LinkedIn. This gives marketers the opportunity to expose more of their content directly to their LinkedIn followers, who see status update content in their LinkedIn updates feed on their LinkedIn homepage.

5. Use LinkedIn Groups to position targeted customer spots and or networking spots to leverage information shared and gained on specific topics by others

An often ignored feature provided by LinkedIn, that has been successfully used by individuals and businesses alike to increase brand visibility and trustworthiness, is LinkedIn's publishing platform to distribute your long-form content. The feature has been opened up to all users as LinkedIn Pulse. Accessing this feature is easy: simply log in to LinkedIn, and select 'Publish a post' at the top of your homepage.

LinkedIn Pulse provides the perfect way to reach a broad audience, through meaty, juicy articles on LinkedIn Pulse. When you publish a new post on Pulse, it's added to your LinkedIn profile. This boosts the attractiveness and authority of your profile, and helps attract more followers. Another clear and added benefit of publishing such posts is that you remain on the top of the feed of your connections, thus increasing brand visibility.

However, at the moment, many users are finding Pulse more useful as a tool for republishing existing posts. So instead of using it as a content creation tool, it's being used as a content distribution tool. Pulse is being used in tandem with personal/company blogs and everything that gets posted on your personal blog is reblogged on Pulse, to increase visibility and brand value.

It's all that it takes to cast your stone into the social ocean

Leverage LinkedIn's built-in analytics feature to see where your marketing efforts have led you. Track and monitor visitors, and build on your marketing strategy accordingly. On the main landing page for your company profile you will be able to see who has engaged with or commented on any of your company updates.

Till this moment, we've discussed optimisation strategies that can be done for free. However, LinkedIn provides options for paid advertising, through