

this means is that you can be in the know about what the audience thinks of your brand and also find out what influences them the most. This gives you the necessary insights to tailor your posts according to your audience's tastes. On the flipside, there are those who are of the strong opinion that the scoring system followed by Klout is completely bogus. But there are those who swear they benefit with the tool.

Pro(s):

Clearly demarcated metrics

Con(s):

Ambiguity regarding the scoring system

6. Social Mention

There are quite a few social media “listening tools” out there but Social Mention is one of the most popular among the lot. And not just because it's completely free. It not just monitors more than one hundred social media sites the data analysis performed by the site is quite in-depth. Influence is shared based on four categories: Sentiment, Strength, Passion and Reach. That may sound like the four philosophical pillars on which some arcane religion was built but really, Social Mention is decisively for the digital age!

Pro(s):

Monitors a large number of sites

Con(s):

The analysis options are not as comprehensive as many similar tools

7. Twazzup

Twazzup is a pretty good tool for those who aren't yet savvy about social media, looking for a good Twitter monitoring tool. Using the tool, all you have to do is just enter the name which you want to track for you to get real-time updates as well as the feed from topmost influencers, the most retweeted links and photos as well as the top 10 keywords pertaining to your search. In other words, a bagful of useful information about a particular brand on Twitter.
