

services, book taxis or tickets, handle monetary transactions, appointments and essentially work as an online secretary or peon.

Telegram also offers an option of secret chats wherein the chat between two participants is fully secure. Brands can effectively use it for solving consumer grievances and the entire information will remain fully secure. Encryption service was recently introduced by WhatsApp as well but Telegram is known to offer better services through its decentralised servers in multiple locations across the world. For greater security, there is the option for a passcode.

Stickers available on Telegram can also be used for effective marketing. Amazon recently used stickers for a viral marketing programme on a similar messaging app. Users had to select between a two pairs of sweaters and could then book one depending on their selection. Starbucks has made use of branded emojis to enable its users to send a coffee to a loved one.

Like snapchat, Telegram also offers users the ability to set timers for self destruction of messages, a useful feature that can come in handy for the banking sector. A brand can message the username and password to its consumer and set it to self destruct after a suitable interval. One of the prime advantages of Telegram is that it can be used on multiple devices simultaneously and can be used seamlessly across all major platforms. Unlike other messaging apps, stickers are available for free and can be added by individual users too. You'll know what I mean if you have ever tried using WhatsApp on your desktop or laptop. Telegram also offers web login feature without the need for any downloads.

Telegram User Interface

Both Telegram and Hike have up surged at alarming rates and have offered strong competition to rival messaging apps. Telegram saw record registrations after Facebook's purchase of WhatsApp primarily due to WhatsApp servers going down and also because of privacy issues. It doesn't take a genius to guess that Facebook paid a bounty for WhatsApp primarily for its subscriber database.

Both Hike and Telegram offers sellers and retailers unique marketing tools. Their features can be employed for seeking reviews or for offering