

MANAGE DIRECTLY THROUGH CMS

Beyond third-party apps, try to integrate social media management right into your website's content management system

Content is definitely the king of the Internet. But every king needs its followers, and in the present day scenario there is no medium stronger than social media to gain and redeem one's followers. There is a lot and lot of content created on the Internet today. Around 5 Exabytes (5 x 10¹⁸ Bytes) of content is created daily, across the Internet, through different platforms.

Amidst this huge stream of data and content that is being created daily, it becomes essential to adapt to certain mechanism that helps your content stand out in the crowd. One such mechanism is Social Media Marketing, through which you can target the exact audience that would be interested in your content and promote it eventually. . Whether you are running your custom coded website or using a popular CMS, ensuring your website looks good on social media is absolutely essential. This makes incorporating Social Media Marketing tools on your website inevitable. We will look at incorporating some of these tools below -

Open Graph

Facebook introduced Open Graph back in 2010 to promote integration between Facebook and other websites. Open Graph allows third party