

Conclusion

The iPhone is the world's most selling item. You must ensure your iPhone's security just for the sheer fact that so many people use it. Imagine if the security of all the iPhone community members were to be compromised at once. Sounds like something straight out of Black Mirror, doesn't it? The point of this is not to make you feel paranoid but to make you understand the ways in which your iPhone can be broken into. If you take all the information we have provided and put it to use, you can almost be certain that you will not fall prey to hackers. Also, make sure to utilize your phone's replacement policy in case your iPhone is not behaving normally. You can always contact Apple customer care in case you are wondering about certain settings or unsure of a certain security clause. They like to take their customer care seriously I've heard.
