

with the number of comments that can be displayed on the widget being the only parameter. But with the video widget, it offers a few more things.

You might have noticed that you can add two Videos widgets on the Dashboard. To begin with, this might seem redundant if you do not explore the Customize section. Using this section you can modify one (or both) the widgets to show you certain types of videos based on parameters that you can modify in this very section. For example, a certain widget could be dedicated to track a certain 'Series' of videos that you have been uploading on your channel apart from the other content on it. This is the very reason that this section allows you to set a custom title for this widget.

A few basic video filters that are available as a part of the drop-down are - Public, Unlisted, Private and Custom. Choosing the custom option (or simply typing into the box below the 'Video Filters' dropdown) lets you define an 'advanced search' that could be used to make the widget as specified in terms of content as you want to. There are quite a few parameters that you can put into this field, and you can check them out at <http://digit.in/AdvSrchYT>.

Video manager

This is the treasure trove for all your videos - the one place within the Creator Studio that lets you fill and modify every single detail about your video. On its own this section has four subsections - Videos, Playlists, Copyright Notices, and Submit Retraction. The last two will be covered later in Chapter 7. The Playlists tab essentially lets you view all your playlists in one place and clicking on 'Edit' takes you to the standard Playlists page of your channel. The Videos section is where all the action is.

To start with, the Videos section shows you the total number of videos on your channel on the top.
