

in a lot of ways, while showing you a side by side preview of the final version. The tools available are clubbed under Quick Fixes, Filters and Blurring effects and comprise of the pretty standard but useful tools. In fact, if all you need is basic visual changes in light, color, speed, that are applicable to the entire video, you could rely on this section to fulfil that need entirely. And even if you have a published video, you could save the edited version as an entirely new video.

Audio

The Audio section lets you choose an audio track for your video from a list of almost 150,000+ tracks from YouTube's library that spreads across many categories and are eligible for monetisation. Choosing a certain track shows you more options like selecting the weightage of the track versus the original audio, and also positioning the audio to start from a certain position in your video and play only a certain portion of the track. This will be really helpful if you're looking for some common background music for your videos as the library is huge and will satisfy most of your music needs.

Don't let there be dead air, have some soundtrack in the background

End Screen & Annotations

This section, as the title says, comprises of two subsections that let you put an end screen and annotations to your videos. Each of these is essential and can help drive viewership to other content or provide additional information.