

- End Screen - YouTube allows you to use standard templates or import from a specific video to define an end screen for your video. End screens are a part of the video that show during the last 5-20 seconds of a video. You can add up to four elements to promote your content, channel and websites. Elements can expand to show more information on hover on desktop and on tap on mobile devices.
- Annotations - These are the hovering content that you see in certain videos that you can use to correct mistakes in your video, point to other relevant content at certain points or however you see fit. They help you enrich the video experience by adding information, interactivity and engagement. The types available are Speech Bubble, Note, Title, Spotlight, Label which are mostly visually different, out of which Title and Note cannot be links.

Cards

A newly added section, Cards can point viewers to a specific URL (from a list of eligible sites) and show customised images, titles and calls to action, depending on the card type - which are -

- Video or Playlist - Promote a video or playlist
- Channel - Promote another channel
- Poll - Encourage viewers to participate in a poll
- Link - Link to an approved website

Viewers will see a teaser on the top right at a designated time set by you for the card, or click the 'i' button on the top right to view the cards for the video. This feature is set to replace annotations so you better learn this soon. Experiment with different types of cards to figure out which ones work for your channel.

Subtitles & CC

This section lets you add subtitles and closed captions to your video, or purchase them from YouTube (which shows you quotes from professional translation and subtitles services). You can also share a link from this section to invite community contributions to your video in the form of subtitles of closed captions.
