

It's buffering

Of course, we are talking about your imminent fame and fortune here, if you're an aspiring YouTuber who has got what it takes to make it big. Nobody really needs to be told anymore how big a career it is - PewDiePie, the most subscribed YouTuber, has a net worth of around $80 million and made $15 million last year itself. And how did he do it? By making videos that showed him playing games and reacting to them. Yes, PewDiePie's example is used time and again, because that's precisely what YouTube could be for you - a platform to show your greatness, if you know how. That's exactly what this book is going to be about.

Becoming a YouTuber involves a lot of aspects. To begin with, you need to figure out what you need to do. You might feel that everything under the sun has been covered - After all, YouTube has been around for twelve years now. And with that kind of thinking, you could not be further from the truth. New channels are springing up and tasting success everyday and all you need is a great idea combined with your determination to take it forward.

When it comes to the technicalities, there are quite a few things to be figure out. First of all, YouTube is a video platform - and that means you need to know how to make good videos. Whether you plan to shoot your own original content, make reaction videos, stream your gameplay or maybe even just break things with a hydraulic press (Check <http://dgit.in/HPCchannel>), you will need the right gear like a video camera, audio equipment or a capture card. And along with that, you will need a lot of digital resources for your videos - after effects, stock footage, free-to-use background music and more.
