

Creator Academy- Where you learn YouTube best practices

YouTube's Creator Academy ought to be your first stop on your way to making videos.

Even though it's a common perception that you can do something goofy on camera which if you put up on YouTube, you would end up becoming a major celebrity, the reality is quite different. Of course, the one-funny-video-and-I-am-a-star idea may work for some once in a while. However, the chances are that you will have to work quite hard to make a video successful on YouTube.

This is exactly why YouTube's Creator Academy is such a valuable resource- especially for those with little experience in making videos. You can access a whole host of guides which would teach you about significant tips that most celeb YouTubers fail to cover in their 'How to be a star' videos.

To give you a better idea of what are in store at the Academy, here are a few things you get:

How to get viewers

The things that you learn on this include everything from uploading branding pictures into your channel page (and the importance in doing so) to creating channel trailers, exclusive video thumbnails and more.

How to grow the audience

While garnering a sizeable audience is a huge task, an even bigger challenge is growing that number-because it entails not just expanding the types of videos you put up, it also requires some technical skills in the realm of the channel itself. You get related lessons from the Academy like cross linking using annotations, organizing the videos better with sections and playlists, distribution of the videos to the subscribers and more.

How to earn money

Being able to earn money from having advertisements on a channel may be
