

ings. For instance, a screencast can be a great way to walk your audience through a PowerPoint presentation. You can add a voiceover that explains the features that they are viewing.

There are pretty good screen capture tools out there – Camtasia and EasyVideoSuite being two of them.

Using stock/royalty-free images and clips

A great way to make a video less monotonous is by adding interesting stock videos. For instance, if it's a teaching video that shows people how to make use of Twitter better, incorporating a stock video of Twitter icons moving across the screen could make it look more lively.

Find great shots, free of charge

Sites such as Shutterstock and Video Blocks are good resources for getting royalty-free stock videos using which you can communicate to your audience. But those are by no means the only ones! Just Google and you are bound to come across a few good ones.

If someone were to ask what does it take to create a successful YouTube channel, there probably is no single answer. The best you can say is that it takes a lot- including putting the right digital resources to use.

Hopefully, you have got a good idea of how to do that by now!
