

audience might not like the entire video but might just tune in for the top 3 picks towards the end of a lister. Consistency also comes into play with the different video assets, let's say you plug your YouTube card links in the video, having these links pop-up discretely in a fixed spot across all your videos will help the viewer not lose focus since they can anticipate the same.

The most important factor that you need to maintain is the consistency of your theme. Your channel will be classified as per this theme. You could be a gaming channel for PC games or console games or mobile games. You are essentially a gaming channel. Perhaps you can tackle real world issues and highlight those local stories which aren't getting the right amount of attention, thus, making you the voice of a community. Or maybe you can just upload cat videos. You can't be a jack of all trades as those channels never survive for long.

Likes, Dislikes and Comments

These matter, a lot! Just like every major search engine on the planet will not reveal how their algorithm ranks products against each other, even YouTube doesn't say much about how Likes, Dislikes and Comments factor into how well videos do aside from the simple explanation that Likes are better. And getting more comments on your videos obviously adds to the engagement and anything with higher engagement is likely to be recommended.

YouTube's algorithm gets refined on a regular basis and the magnitude to which these factors affect your video's visibility in YouTube will change from time to time. Recently, with the introduction of the trending page on

They matter more than you think
