

way to go. So how do you go about getting sponsors? We'll get to that in a bit, but before that there is a set of prerequisites that you need to look at before you can start approaching sponsors

- Quality content - On YouTube, both the quality and quantity of the content you post matters. Obviously, your initial videos would have been amateurish but before approaching someone for sponsorship you need to be putting out quality content regularly.
- Quantity of content - Don't approach sponsors on day 1 of your YouTube channel. Start easy and build up a backlog of good content before you decide on approaching them. The first thing they (or even the viewers for that matter) check out when they open your channel is your previous videos. So make sure you have a good number of uploaded videos before approaching anyone
- A viewer/ subscriber base - Sponsorship is a 2 way street- you are looking to earn money, sponsors are looking to expand their reach and brand. And the only way this can happen is when your channel, the one being sponsored, has a good subscriber base and your uploaded videos come up with a good number of views regularly.

Once you are sure that you are putting out good, quality content regularly and your work is getting a regular amount of views, you can start approaching various companies and people for sponsorships.

- Start off by identifying your audience. Your sponsor will be sponsoring you because he wants your viewers to buy its products. So identify the products that your subscribers and viewers might be interested in buying. Engage with them and figure out what they want.
- Next, decide upon what you can give to the brands that are sponsoring you. Their product needs to fit in somewhere and you can not just randomly pick it up in one of your videos and ask your viewers to go buy it. List down what you are willing to do and in exchange for what. Will you be reviewing their product in exchange for keeping it? Will you exclusively use their product in exchange of a sum of money? Think and come up with different plans with different pricing.
- Now that you know what your viewers might be interested in buying and what you can offer, make a comprehensive list of brands and companies that sell those products and services. Research all such brands from big companies to smaller startups and ways in which you can help them promote themselves
