

More than a decade later, YouTube is the second most visited website on the internet, ahead of Facebook and only behind Google.

There are a number of reasons why YouTube hit the big league. They had a nice idea and good investment which led to a successful product. But more importantly, it started a new revolution of sorts. It gave a platform to everyone, from budding filmmakers who want to showcase their talents and skills to your mom who just wants to share the funny things your dog does. It gave rise to YouTube sensations. It helped people share their talents with a global audience. It made people millionaires by just creating and sharing their videos. And if you take a look at these stats, you might just get ready to leave your job and start thinking about names for your channel and what you'll buy when you become a millionaire.

Hold on to your horses. We shouldn't be getting ahead of ourselves. This month, we'll be showing you the ins and outs of YouTubing, how to keep up with the trends, the gear required, and most importantly how to earn money from your channel.

Though, before we start there are a couple of basic questions that you should ask and we should answer. Don't worry, we have listed out both, the questions and answers here for you.

YouTube makes up for 77 per cent of all the content across video sharing and streaming sites

What is a YouTuber?

‘YouTuber’ was one of the 500 words added to Oxford dictionary last year and it defines it as:

“A frequent user of the video-sharing website YouTube, especially someone who produces and appears in videos on the site.”
