

If you look at the top channels on YouTube, a good metric to judge that is the number of subscribers. Subscribers on YouTube are a tricky thing. They are generally your more involved audience, who engage with your content by subscribing to your channel. This lets you know the approximate reach of your content and base other metrics on this. While it is hard to say for sure that YouTube has a gaming and tech bias, you can observe it in terms of the content produced and user profiles.

Tech: MKBHD

Marquees K Brownlee or MKBHD as he is known, is a tech YouTuber who started out by producing tutorials/reviews of hardware products and some freeware. He used to screencast in his earliest videos, with a voice over.

He then began expanding into shooting video after requests from viewers wanting to see the hardware on video. MKBHD's content focuses on mobile devices, but he has moved to reviewing auto tech as well. He was formerly a professional ultimate frisbee player and started off reviewing the gadgets he owned or got his hands on.

Linus Tech Tips

Among humble beginnings, Linus Tech Tips can be counted as one. Linus Sebastian was working as a sales representative with NCIX, a Canadian Online Computer Store. He was asked to make a few videos demonstrating
