

He used to perform covers of famous pop songs and post videos on YouTube. His singing talent was recognized by a record label producer and signed a contract with him to release his first album. Though his music largely caters to the teenage female audience, he is one of the top rated YouTubers of all time. While there are largely different opinions regarding how good he is as an artist, there is no denying the role that YouTube has played in his success story.

Penn Masala

Although Penn Masala did not begin their journey on YouTube, a large part of the success in their discovery can be attributed to it. Penn Masala is an a-cappella band focusing on Hindi. It was started by a group of Indians in 1996 at the University of Pennsylvania and was unique to its time as the only

Hindi a-cappella group. They soon moved into Hindi and English fusion music and started posting content on YouTube. They became really popular after producing a mashup of old Hindi songs titled “The Evolution of Bollywood Music” 2 years ago. The video has about 2 million views till date.

What all these channels have in common is that, they’ve picked their own content style and are able to connect with their audiences. Most YouTube channels are popular not because they have viral content every time, but because YouTube’s discovery algorithm promotes consistency. So a person who’s uploading videos on a regular basis, is likely to see a larger audience
