

problem for the PS Vita is most probably the lack of titles and the high price of games released for it. The Vita's reputation has suffered because of this. However, you can't complain about the Vita performance-wise. When you buy a PS Vita, you get exactly what you paid for; hands on luxury gaming.

8. Nintendo 3DS

The Nintendo 3DS is the successor to the Nintendo DS. It has the same iconic DS clam shape, but it is far more superior than its predecessor. It has a no glasses required 3D mode, which could be toggled on with the flick of a button. This meant that you could play games in 3D without having to wear those cumbersome 3D glasses. Also, the touch screen didn't need the stylus anymore. Like the DS, the 3DS had backward compatibility and in addition, had an online store option too. This was perhaps Nintendo's way of competing with the PSN and Xbox Live services. You could now purchase games and play game demos online via the Nintendo E-shop. All these features combined with super fun titles like Super Smash bros, Pokemon X and Y, and Legend of Zelda: The Ocarina of Time, made the 3DS a smash hit. The Nintendo 3DS boasts a respectable 63 million units in sales.

9. Nintendo Switch

You knew this was coming. Nintendo never ceases to capture the user's imagination and come up with new and fun ways to interact with the games
