

Tab Options:

Safari unfortunately offers only limited control with tabs. Tab Options is a neat extension that makes up for this. It allows users to assign hotkeys to certain tab-switching, opening and closing actions, and lots more.

Turn Off The Lights:

A must-have for regular YouTubers, TOTL is a classic extension to enhance your video watching experience. Quite simply, it's a button that dims the entire screen except for a video that might be playing on the active tab. Helps eliminate distractions and provide a theatre-like experience on the beautiful Mac screen.

ClickToPlugin:

Plugins on websites can be quite annoying. They can range from being spam or advertisements, to dangerous Flash embedded code. ClickToPlugin is a cool extension that blocks absolutely all plugin content until it is clicked on. Fret not, you can customise a whitelist for your trusted sites!

F.B Purity:

Available now for all major browsers, this magical extension helps unclutter your Facebook feed. It gets rid of all sorts of things – ads, game posts, sponsored posts and lots more (as per your choosing, of course).

NoMoreiTunes:

A common annoyance for iMac users is how iTunes keeps opening when an App Store link is clicked. Sometimes, we just want to browse through the features without getting shown the payment page! NoMoreiTunes ensures that the link remains in the web browser as a preview.

Shut Up:

Sick of getting triggered by ridiculous comments on sites you don't even use that often? Shut Up is a simple button-based extension that modifies the CSS to get rid of comments sections wherever you choose. It has the cool option of site-specific memory – so you can block entire swathes of annoying commenters on your alternative source of news!

The cons - things that make you go tut-tut

Saving the worst for last, here are some issues that a Safari user may unfortunately have to face.
