

As reported by Fortune, during a conference call with analysts recently, Tim Cook said the company has seen over 450% growth in the number of transactions done via Apple Pay over a year, with more than 10 million contactless payment terminals across the globe supporting it currently. Apple Pay is supported by almost 90% contactless payment terminals across the USA with more than 1600 banks in the USA having partnered with Apple. All these numbers show a steady rise in the number of people using digital wallets, but it is still far from becoming mainstream. Also, the company faces competition from Samsung and Android digital wallets, both dubbed 'pay', with the former launched in India recently. The race is still wide open and it will be sometime before someone comes out in the front.

How to set it up?

Setting up your Apple Pay account is an easy process. All you need is a supported device updated with the latest version of iOS, watchOS or macOS, a card from a supported card issuer, and an apple ID signed in to iCloud. Apple Pay lets you add upto 8 cards on any one device and each card needs to be added to each different device if you want to use it with multiple devices.

To setup Pay on your iPhone:

- Open the Wallet and select 'Add credit or Debit Card' under Apple Pay
- Follow the steps and enter the relevant card details
- Once your bank or card issuer has verified all details, you are good to go

iPad

- Go to settings> Wallet & Apple Pay and Select 'Add credit or Debit card'
- Follow the steps displayed and enter all relevant details of your card
- Once your bank has verified all the information, you tap next and your Apple Pay account is ready to use
- You can select your default card from within the app

Apple Watch

- Open the watch app on your iPhone and select 'Wallet & Apple Pay'
- Follow the steps on the screen and add your card.
- Once your bank verifies all the details, tap next and you are done

MacBook Pro with Touch ID

- Go to system preferences> Wallet & Apple Pay
- Tap add card and follow the on screen instructions to add card details
- your bank verifies the details start using Apple Pay.