

Just Google it

Many tech companies are out there vying for the top spot, but Google seems like it just might be on to something

Once upon a time, there weren't too many big tech companies in this world. In fact, if you were counting big tech companies who solely relied on software as their main product – you could count them on the fingers of one hand. Fast forward to today, and there are plenty of such companies out there vying for your attention (and your money). But if there's one name among all of these that has pervaded almost every aspect of your life (and almost entirely for free) it's Google.

The search giant, though it can no longer be called just a search giant, had humble beginnings not too long ago. With an aim to change just the way people discover things on the internet, Google pretty much ended up changing the rest of the world, for better or worse!