

Google Cast and Chromecasts

“It’s your phone... but on TV!”

Mirroring your phone screen to the TV is not a very novel concept. There have been devices with even mini HDMI ports for a long time now. But one can argue that it didn’t become popular with the masses until Apple’s Airplay and more importantly, Google Cast came out, which made wireless casting effortless. The software parts aside, there is also the issue of hardware. While Chromecast might not be the best streaming stick out there (BooMan had a few choice words about that) it still popularised the idea of small-form-factor, streaming sticks. Here’s an overview on everything to do with casting and Google.