

graphic was to be divided into parts of a pie chart, children, gamers, travelers, and people living in the US, Australia, New Zealand, Korea, and Mexico would make up a nifty sum of the total. Thus, in hindsight, it comes as no surprise that they would launch services catering to these specific categories. A brief introduction to these services is in order.

YouTube Red is a paid monthly subscription that includes several perks, and is available exclusively to the users based out of US, Australia,

This is a screengrab of a news story featuring Charlie and his brother. The story is about how Charlie bit his finger. Definitely not earth-shattering, and yet, the most popular video in the world for all of 171 days

NZ, Korea, and Mexico. It allows access to videos without advertisements, as well as paid content such as channels or TV and movie rentals. It also allows for offline viewing, and listening to videos with the screen off. The last amongst these features is a gripe for users around the world, and for this alone, a fair few amongst them would subscribe to YouTube Red. It also allows you to download videos for your device and watch them for up to 30 days without an active connection. Its subscription cost is $10 a month.

YouTube Gaming was launched to take on Twitch, a platform that gamers use for live streaming. This service will offer over 25,000 “game pages” individually dedicated to specific titles. Users would be able to add specific games of interest to their collection and receive notifications regarding them. They will also be able to exclusively follow YouTube creators and game companies. YouTube aimed to combine existing services such as 60
