

Show and Learn

Along with developing skills it is also important to keep your talent polished. While improving by learning through the platforms mentioned earlier is one way to enhance your skills, showcasing your talent by publishing your work can also serve as a learning experience. There are multiple platforms at the disposal of a freelancer which can serve as a professional springboard. You can use these platforms to network, display your work and connect with other freelancers. You can also use these platforms to get feedback on your work and expand your portfolio.

Indiefolio:

Indiefolio provides a platform for the creative community in India to network and share their work. It is one of the best platforms for freelancers to prove their mettle and bond with others in the same field. Indiefolio also organises competitions where the best from the industry serve as judges. This platform is ideal for someone who is starting out as a freelancer. You can feature your work and find a way to advance professionally. You can even learn and be inspired from what others in the field are doing.

Indiefolio showcases your work across the creative community in India.

Behance:

While Indiefolio is limited to the creative community in India, Behance provides a global platform. Behance attracts the top universities and companies from all over the world. Simply being on Behance will inspire you to up your game. Given most freelancing work demands creativity, platforms like Behance serve as Behance can get the world's attention to your talent.