

and efficiently thanks to the internet, so the most difficult part about being paid to write is actually just deciding to do it. You don't even need to be connected to the internet to write (though you do need it to deliver). In fact, you don't even need technology (though it does make the job a LOT easier). When you write, having an office is a matter of choice. Despite that, our full-time writers work from the Digit office – just an indication that it's a great place to be!

As a freelancer you get to be your own boss, and with writing you have the added advantage of choosing your work. You can write about what you know, what you care about, or what you think others should care about. Writing is not that different from talking (unless you're writing literature) and how easily do you talk? Imagine getting paid to put down what you know (and what others know) in words – yes, freelance writing is a dream!

Make the leap!

Freelance writers get paid by various metrics. In India the standard is per word, but in some other countries the standard is a per hour payment policy. Then there are employers who pay per article, and employers who pay a monthly retainer for regular work. Either way, writing freelance can be a lucrative profession given some time and effort. Well established writers can easily make upwards of an engineer's salary. The best part is, you are only limited by time and your laziness. Unlike salaried professionals, you don't have the insecurity of being laid off, and you don't have to answer to anyone. Take on more work = make more money!