

Home is where the money is

Every single day, you hate the sight of that boss or colleague whose sole aim in life seems to be to get under your nerves. Or perhaps, you have seen the life drained out of someone close to you by a 9 to 5 daily job. Or maybe, you've had enough of the outside world and want to stay locked in forever. Okay, we might be getting a bit carried away here, but surely, you get the drift? One's interest in making money from home could be due a wide array of reasons, and unfortunately, the reasons to fail at doing so are equally abundant. So how do you make money from home? That's what this Fasttrack is all about.

Before you do anything at all, you've got to make sure that you're worthy. No, not exactly Mjolnir-lifting-worthy, more like an employable-kind of worthy. To do that, an amazing portfolio is a primary requirement, followed by the ability to advertise oneself. But how do you have an impressive portfolio when you're just starting off? Well, that's why there's an entire chapter on just that. Additionally, online courses and other avenues to build a skill set and repertoire are helpful at every stage. Once that is done, you need to have a solid understanding of how contracts and agreements work. After all, we aren't really talking about a mass-recruitment scenario here – you've got to look out for yourself.

The next few chapters of this Fast Track explore the numerous domains in which you could make money for home. Freelancing itself is a big arena that comprises of several different specialties like freelance writing, graphic design and more. Getting into direct sales and marketing is also an option. And if you're of the creative vein, you might as well try your