What about the monies?

The golden question. Try silver, you won't be able to afford gold. Let's get real, nobody's making their millions tutoring from home. Starting out, one will be making a few hundred rupees an hour. But with a steady stream of students, exceptional subject knowledge and a good reputation, it's possible to be taking even as high as Rs. 2000 per hour of special attention tutoring. Spending just two hours per student per weekend, that's a tidy average of 8000 bucks per student per month.

If advertising could convince people smoking was healthy, surely it can land you a tutoring gig?

Websites like Toppr and Chegg pay you on different scales. Toppr offers between INR 10 and 35 per 'doubt' solved, each doubt taking usually between 5 and 10 minutes. Chegg, an American website, pays a whopping $20 per hour, which works out currently to about INR 1200 per hour.

It's a good way to make some extra saving or spending money, depending on your priorities. How long before you can get that Ferrari though? Pegging a Ferrari at a rounded off 5 CR and assuming you're an ace tutor raking in INR 1000 per hour, you'll have to put in 50,000 hours of tutoring to be able to damage the expensive car on the bad roads outside your house. With an intense 20 hours of tutoring every weekend, that will take you about 50 years. Good luck!

How to get started?

There's only one way to start selling anything - advertise. Get out there, talk to parents, put up posters and ask for referrals. If you're crippledly afraid
