

there are competitors. Developer Media (<http://dgit.in/devmedia>) is a leading company involved in the digital marketing arena. Part of Code Project, the company provides powerful advertisement solutions to drive profits from your content. The service is normally used by software developers and programmers. However, few tech bloggers are also reportedly making use of the platform. The advantage of the system is that you will be paid upon reaching $10. However, the payment will be made via PayPal and you will have to bear the service charges.

Chitika enable publishers to generate revenue from the generated web traffic irrespective of the size of the website. Even if you just started to blog, you can join and place ads. The ecosystem is designed to drive traffic via customized algorithms. The amount of revenue you can generate will be based on the traffic of your blog. Whatever advertisement platform you integrate, the revenue generation is relatively proportional to the amount of traffic.

You can also try Infolinks, which is a popular link based monetization service. If your blog contains 50 to 100 articles, you can apply for the program. The platform works by placing link ads inside your content and the revenue will depend upon the number of hits. You will be paid upon reaching $50.

Infolinks helps you to generate revenue from within the content

Sponsored Articles

In addition to normal monetization, you can also apply the technique of sponsored articles on your blog. If your site grows rapidly, companies will provide articles in return for publication on your blog for a fixed payment. You will receive instant cash soon after the publication. However, the company will ask you to provide dofollow links inside the article. In SEO terminology, the dofollow link eats up link juice from your blog,