

place or if you cannot seem to figure out how to use the induction stove top at your brother's place - there is a step by step video on YouTube for you.

Have you ever stopped to wonder where that content comes from? How do they have so much content on the website? Who are the people creating this content?

YouTube is driven by content posted by users and brands across the globe. Most of the videos on YouTube are created by freelancers like yourself (or the kind you aspire to be). Creating videos is not very time consuming and can easily be done on your mobile phone cameras these days. The camera quality and resolution of cameras installed in your handheld devices is only becoming better with each passing day. These homeshoot style videos can make you money - serious money. Don't believe us? Keep reading to know more.

How to make money from YouTube

There is more than one way to start earning revenue from YouTube videos. While most beginners will focus on Google AdSense and the money it brings in, there are other avenues that you can think of focusing your energies on to bring the moolah in. Let's have a look at all of them -

Advertising revenue:

This is the most obvious method of the lot. When you watch a video on YouTube, it will usually be preceded by an ad that you can choose to skip (or in some cases, you absolutely must watch). When users interact with the ads, the creator of the video gets paid. Getting the user to interact with the ad is another ballgame altogether and not one that the YouTuber needs to worry about in his/her initial stages.

There are multiple mediums of calculating how the YouTuber gets paid. It could be on the basis of impressions. For every thousand views that an ad gets, the advertiser will pay a certain amount. A higher amount is usually awarded to the 'pay per click' format - where the payment is dependent on the number of users clicking on the ads that appear before the video or alongside the video. Please note that a huge chunk of the revenue from these ads will go to YouTube as well. So everything that you earn is not yours for the keeping. That being said, it can still be a sizeable amount if you get your game right.

Sponsored or branded content:

Picture this - A sports apparel brand that is relatively new in the market