

Before you sit down to create that YouTube channel, here is a list of things to keep in mind -

Have a goal in mind:

Think about why you want to make this YouTube channel (other than the obvious aim of earning revenue from it). Think about what niche you want to cater to. This will give you a clear idea of the kind of videos you should be creating and the kind of audience you should be targeting. Things will get easier from there on.

Create a channel:

To do this you will need to create a Google account, or use an existing one. Navigate to YouTube and follow instructions to create a channel. You will, at this point, be asked to name your channel. Try and choose a name that is relevant to the content that you will be creating OR you could choose a generic name that has a 'sticky' component (it sticks in the mind of the user and they are likely to remember it even months later).

For instance, PopSugar, other than being a successful media company in the US, is also a very popular channel on YouTube. They cater to everything from serious fitness to make up and have subsidiary channels branching out from the home channel. So there is PopSugar Fitness, PopSugar Beauty, so on and so forth.

Getting the 'About' section right:

This is the place where you get to make a first impression on your viewers. It is probably the first thing people will read when they land on the home-page of your channel. Take the time to write a few lines that aptly describe your content, and tell viewers what to expect from the channel in the days to come. Additionally, ensure that you provide links to all your other social media pages here - Instagram, Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest etc. Try and connect with your audience across multiple platforms to keep them engaged. Your storytelling ability can be boosted by this cross-forum interaction with your fans.

Get. Set. Video:

This is the most exciting part about being a YouTuber - creating the actual content that you will upload on your channel. Make a couple of really interesting videos. You could have a teaser video that precedes the main video
