

content. To have meaningful relationships with your YouTube Channel fans, you need to be creating good engaging content on a consistent basis. Around 3 to 5 videos per week is a good number to aim for. This will ensure that people find good quality content on your channel, plus begin to see your expertise in the field you have chosen to create content within.

Be a team player:

While the aim is to increase traffic to your channel, a great way to do this is by staying active on YouTube. What this means is that you follow other channels, not necessarily in the same industry as yours. Make sure that you interact with their content - leave likes and comments on their videos. Every comment that you leave is a direct link back to your channel. Building ties with other YouTubers will pay off in the long run. It will also provide you with a chance to engage in collaborations.

Collaborate with other YouTubers:

When a choreographer with 13,000 plus subscribers invites a stylist with 9,000 plus subscribers to come dance with her in a video, the results are interesting. Their video is now being distributed to a cumulative total of 22,000 viewers. Collaborating with other YouTubers helps keep your content fresh. It always adds additional viewers into the mix. This is a great way to expand your fan base. Plus, the goodwill it earns you with your fellow YouTubers is also a benefit. They will be more likely to interact with your channel, recommend your channel to their fans and talk about you in their social media posts. It creates offline relationships with online contacts.

While creating original content is not easy or simple, the returns make it worth. The views you receive from your YouTube Channel could well tout you as a go-to name in your field of choice. Keep these points in mind while you create that YouTube channel and populate it -

- 1) Keep the content fresh and engaging
- 2) Be consistent in your posts
- 3) Engage with your audience
- 4) Avoid sponsored content for brands that do not fit into the brand story you are trying to create for your own channel- your audience trusts you and you don't want to lose it.
- 5) Keep your video titles catchy and interesting
- 6) Shorter videos are likely to be watched till the end - Try to divide your content among different videos if it can be done without losing its relevance
